Getting and Keeping People Engaged

It's happened to many of us: you're running a meeting or teaching a class and you ask a question. Silence. Crickets. Perhaps you start a group activity and some participants aren't, well...participating. Or maybe class started out great but now you feel like you're walking through quicksand, uphill, to get anyone to share their ideas.

Do we have a session for you?! Stacey Caston, NHI Director, and Lauren Harrington, Instructional Systems Designer, returns to the conference this year with a new set of practical tips and tricks. Join us in this interactive session as we discuss classroom management strategies to manage real-life situations. Come try out techniques to increase learner participation. Walk away with real tools you can use to engage your learners.

History:

Welcome to Albuquerque's Sawmill District! This historic area, once home to the bustling American Lumber Company in the early 1900s, has undergone an exciting transformation. The lumber company's vast complex made it a hub of industrial activity in the Southwest, a legacy continued by the Paxton Lumber Company in the late 1950s.

Adding to the excitement are new mixed-use and workforce apartment complexes, which bring a dynamic urban vibe to the district. These developments offer stylish living spaces alongside retail and office areas, creating a bustling neighborhood where residents can live, work, and play. The Sawmill District is a shining example of how thoughtful revitalization can honor the past while building a bright future

Today, the Sawmill District is a vibrant, mixed-use community that beautifully blends its industrial past with modern flair. At the heart of the revitalization is the Sawmill Market, a lively food hall and community space that opened in 2019, showcasing local food, art, and culture. The Sawmill Community Land Trust has played a key role in this transformation, ensuring the area remains inclusive with affordable housing and sustainable opportunities for all
